Geachte Voorzitter,

Hierbij bied ik u aan, mede namens de minister-president, het verslag van de Europese Raad van 17 en 18 december 2015.

De Minister van Buitenlandse Zaken,

Bert Koenders

Verslag van de Europese Raad van 17 en 18 december 2015

De Europese Raad besprak op 17 december de aanpak van de migratiecrisis alsmede de stand van zaken inzake het aanstaande referendum in het Verenigd Koninkrijk. Op de tweede dag werd gesproken over terrorismebestrijding, de EMU, de interne markt en energie- en klimaatbeleid. Tot slot werd ook van gedachten gewisseld over het conflict in het oosten van Oekraïne. De bijeenkomst begon met de traditionele gedachtewisseling met de voorzitter van het Europees parlement, Martin Schulz (toespraak bijgevoegd).

Migratie

De ER besprak de voortgang in de aanpak van de Europese migratiecrisis. De discussie ging in op de maatregelen naar aanleiding van de hoge instroom van migranten en de druk die deze instroom op de Schengenzone en het Europese asielaanvraagstelsel legt. Aan de orde kwamen o.a. de voorstellen op het gebied van migratie die de Commissie op 15 december jl. presenteerde. Deze voorstellen betreffen een Europese grenswacht, de Frontex-verordening, de Schengengrenscode, hervestiging en het Europese reisdocument voor terugkeer. Verder werd gesproken over het belang van een goede follow-up van de Westelijke Balkan conferentie, de Valletta-top en de EU-Turkije top. Door veel regeringsleiders werd benadrukt dat het schort aan implementatie van de maatregelen die overeen gekomen zijn. Met name bij het operationaliseren van de hotspots, de relocatie-besluiten en de terugkeermaatregelen is sprake van tekortkomingen die op korte termijn dienen te worden geadresseerd. De instellingen en de lidstaten worden in de conclusies van de Europese Raad opgeroepen op korte termijn actie te ondernemen op al deze terreinen, evenals bij de bewaking van de buitengrenzen en het bestrijden van mensensmokkel. De Raad van Ministers is opgedragen verder te werken aan de voorstellen voor een crisisrelocatie mechanisme en de lijst veilige landen, alsmede het voorstel voor een Europese grens- en kustwacht en de amendering op de Schengen Grens Code, teneinde systematische controles aan de Schengen buitengrens te verzekeren. De Raad wordt opgeroepen tot een positiebepaling op het voorstel voor een Europese grens- en kustwacht te komen tijdens het Nederlandse voorzitterschap.

De Europese Raad werd voorafgegaan door een bijeenkomst van een tiental landen met Turkije, op uitnodiging van de Oostenrijkse kanselier. Met de Turkse minister-president Davutoglu werd de voortgang van het EU-Turkije actieplan besproken. De Nederlandse minister-president heeft tijdens deze bijeenkomst het belang benadrukt van voortvarende uitvoering van het actieplan. Zoals besproken tijdens het kamerdebat ter voorbereiding op de Europese Raad heeft hij daarbij gezegd dat er een bereidheid zou moeten zijn om een deel van in Turkije verblijvende vluchtelingen via hervestiging naar Europa te laten komen, onder voorwaarde dat daaraan voorafgaand de irreguliere instroom vanuit Turkije de nul nadert en Turkije zich committeert aan overname van vluchtelingen die alsnog op irreguliere wijze vanuit Turkije het EU-grondgebied bereiken.

EMU

De ER sprak over de follow-up van het vijf presidentenrapport. De kabinetsappreciatie van de mededelingen en voorstellen van de Commissie inzake de EMU van 21 oktober jl. is uw Kamer op 6 november jl. toegegaan (Kamerstuk 21501-20 nr. 1051). Uw Kamer ontving ook op 14 december jl. een appreciatie van het op 24 november jl. verschenen voorstel tot een verordening inzake een Europees depositoverzekeringstelsel en de eveneens op 24 november jl. verschenen mededeling inzake voltooiing van de Bankenunie (Kamerstuk 21501-07 nr. 1334).

De conclusies van de Europese Raad onderstrepen het belang van de voltooiing van de EMU. In het bijzonder wordt opgeroepen te werken aan een meer effectieve economische governance (stroomlijning van het Europees Semester), de externe vertegenwoordiging van de euro en de bankenunie. De Raad zal in juni 2016 rapporteren over de voortgang ter zake. De Europese Raad zal uiterlijk eind 2017 komen te spreken over de noodzaak en wenselijkheid van lange termijn maatregelen ter versterking van de EMU.

Interne markt

De ER sprak over de interne markt in al zijn dimensies: een diepere interne markt voor goederen en diensten, een digitale interne markt en de kapitaalmarktunie. De ER nam conclusies aan waarin wordt opgeroepen tot voortgang op alle terreinen. De minister-president heeft gemeld dat het Nederlandse voorzitterschap ambitieuze voortgang op deze onderwerpen nastreeft in de eerste helft van volgend jaar. Hij heeft daarbij gemeld dat er naast een diepere interne markt ook sprake moet zijn van een eerlijkere interne markt, hetgeen zijn weerslag heeft gevonden in de conclusies van de ER. In dat verband streeft Nederland naar het starten van een discussie over arbeidsmobiliteit tijdens het Nederlands voorzitterschap, op basis van de voorstellen van de Commissie (Labour Mobility Package). ER-voorzitter Tusk heeft opgemerkt dat de Interne Markt in het komende half jaar zonodig opnieuw voor de Europese Raad zal worden geagendeerd.

Energie Unie met een Toekomstgericht Klimaatbeleid

De ER sprak over de energie-unie met een toekomstgericht klimaatbeleid. Op klimaatterrain werden de uitkomsten van de COP21-klimaatconferentie in Parijs verwelkomd. De Commissie en de Raad is verzocht de resultaten te evalueren m.h.o.o. een klimaat- en energieraamwerk voor 2030. De Commissie en de Raad is verzocht daartoe een routekaart op te stellen.

Ten aanzien van de Energieunie riep de ER op tot het spoedig indienen van de noodzakelijke wetgevende voorstellen, volledige implementatie van wetgeving t.a.v. energie-efficiëntie, voorbereiding van een strategie t.a.v. onderzoek, innovatie en concurrentiekracht, en spoedige uitvoering van belangrijke infrastructuurprojecten.

Verenigd Koninkrijk

De ER besprak de stand van zaken inzake het aanstaande referendum in het VK over het EU-lidmaatschap. Minister-president Cameron gaf een uiteenzetting over de Britse wensen tot hervorming, waarbij hij inging op de terreinen die genoemd worden in zijn eigen brief van 10 november jl. en de brief van ER-voorzitter Tusk van 7 december jl. Veel leden van de Europese Raad intervierden vervolgens. Daarbij werd over de vier verschillende pijlers van de Britse wensen gesproken, waarbij de meeste aandacht uitging naar de Britse wens tot een overgangperiode voor toegang tot "in work benefits". Meerdere lidstaten wezen erop dat deze wens niet mag leiden tot discriminatie tussen Britse onderdanen en werknemers uit andere EU lidstaten. Zoals bekend is dit ook voor Nederland een belangrijk punt. Als bekend lagen er nog geen concrete voorstellen op tafel. De discussie in de ER vormde een goede start, maar de onderhandelingen kunnen pas starten wanneer deze voorstellen er zijn.

Directie Integratie Europa

De ER nam zich voor om op basis van het voorbereidende werk van ER-voorzitter Tusk bij zijn bijeenkomst van 18 en 19 februari a.s. tot oplossingen te komen voor de Britse wensen.

Terrorisme

De staatshoofden en regeringsleiders spraken over terrorismebestrijding en legden daarbij nadruk op voortvarende implementatie van gemaakte afspraken in de ER, de JBZ-raad en in de Raad Buitenlandse Zaken in de loop van 2015. De aanslagen in Parijs op 13 november jl. hebben de Europese lidstaten gesterkt in hun strijd tegen terrorisme, gebruikmakend van alle instrumenten die de EU en lidstaten tot hun beschikking hebben. Preventie speelt hier een belangrijke rol in. Het belang van coherentie tussen intern en extern veiligheidsbeleid werd door meerdere ER-leden benadrukt.

De ER onderstreepte met name de urgentie van het delen van relevante informatie, zoals invoeren van data over buitenlandse terroristische strijders (Foreign Terrorist Fighters – FTF) in SIS II, het verbeteren van interoperabiliteit tussen relevante databases en het intensiveren van de contraterrorisme samenwerking tussen lidstaten en met Europol en Frontex.

De ER verwelkomde de overeenstemming tussen de mede-wetgevers over de PNR-richtlijn als een belangrijke stap in de bestrijding van terrorisme. Tevens werd door de leden van de ER benadrukt dat de Commissievoorstellen over de strijd tegen terrorisme en over vuurwapens snel in behandeling moeten worden genomen door de Raad. Verdere acties zullen worden ontplooid ten aanzien van het tegengaan van financiering van terrorisme onder meer door inzet van sancties. Ook zal de EU de samenwerking met partners in Noord-Afrika, het Midden-Oosten, Turkije en de Westelijke Balkan versterken. Over de voortgang ten aanzien van de implementatie zal voorafgaand aan de ER van februari 2016 worden gerapporteerd.

Internationale relaties

Syrië

Hoge Vertegenwoordiger Mogherini informeerde de leden van de Europese Raad over de derde bijeenkomsten van de International Syria Support Group (ISSG) op 18 december in New York. Deze bijeenkomst zou de aftrap voor de politieke dialoog tussen het regime en de oppositie vormen die de weg kan bereiden voor een staakt-het-vuren. De ER sprak steun uit voor het inspanningen voor de ISSG om het conflict in Syrië te beëindigen alsook voor de Global Coalition in de strijd tegen ISIS.

Libië

De Europese Raad verwelkomde de ondertekening van het "Libya Agreement" in Skhirat op 17 december jl. dat onder auspiciën van de VN tot stand was gekomen. De HV lichtte toe dat de ondertekening een startpunt is van een proces, waarbij inclusiviteit van essentieel belang is. Zij gaf aan dat het nu aan de EU en de internationale gemeenschap is het proces te steunen.

Oekraïne/Rusland

De leden van de Europese Raad waren het er over eens dat de Minsk-akkoorden niet volledig zijn geïmplementeerd en dat dit logischerwijs moet leiden tot het behouden en verlengen van de restrictieve maatregelen jegens Rusland. De Raad werd verzocht het besluitvormingsproces hiervoor af te ronden.

- as prepared for delivery -

Ladies and gentlemen,
these past years we have been rushing from crisis summit to crisis summit: from the financial crisis, on to youth unemployment, the Euro, the Ukraine conflict, then one Greek summit followed the other, since summer we have been almost exclusively focussing on refugees, which maybe will soon be displaced by meetings on counter-terrorism. Once a new subject, a new crisis rises on the horizon, we lose sight of other problems we considered pressing only a few moments before. And with them we also give up our long-term goals, which we set ourselves to solve existential issues and to set the scene for a good future. In place of long-term, anticipatory action, short-term, single-topic actions are chosen. In too many policy fields, there is a tendency to fail to address issues for the long-run and to fully deliver on what was promised. This has to change. We finally have to return to long-term sustainable policies which address the common interest. Therefore, I welcome that on this European Council agenda we find many of the most pressing issues which we must address in parallel: migration, counter terrorism, the economic and monetary union, the climate and energy policy, the Ukraine conflict and the British referendum. Now, we are called upon to deliver on these issues.

Ukraine Summit

Ladies and gentlemen,
Yesterday evening President Tusk, President Juncker and I met with President Poroshenko to discuss the situation in Eastern Ukraine. Without doubt it's a positive development that the ceasefire agreement reached in Minsk in February of this year is being largely respected. But many other points of the Minsk agreement are still awaiting implementation. Among them the agreed decentralisation reform and local elections in Donbas but also, and most importantly, the withdrawal of weaponry and troops, and the returning of the external border to Ukraine's control. Only when these conditions are fully met can we expect a lasting peace in Eastern Ukraine.

To guarantee a lasting peace it is equally important to support Ukraine in stabilising its economy, ensuring its energy independence and pushing forward the necessary judicial and anti-corruption reforms. The EU-Ukraine Association Agreement will finally come into force this January and we must ensure its successful implementation. Visa liberalisation should also be prioritised for Ukraine and Georgia and we expect a positive opinion of the European Commission in the nearest future. I encourage the Member States to endorse this decision..

Let me add one point. We must certainly explore ways to involve Russia constructively in the international efforts to settle the Syrian conflict. But we must beware of issue-linkage. Syria and Ukraine are not connected. No concessions or trade-offs must be made between the two. The sectorial sanctions are clearly linked to the Minsk agreements and have been imposed on Russia because of Russia's illegal annexation of Crimea and the on-going conflict in Eastern Ukraine. The sanctions can only be reviewed under one condition: if substantial progress is made and the Minsk agreements are fulfilled. It is crucial that as Europeans we stand united on this issue. Because united we are strong.

Migration

As the refugee and migration crisis enters winter we must ask ourselves, does Europe have a plan, or are we improvising day by day?

The European Parliament believes that with a clear plan and strong political will this crisis can be managed. Unfortunately, for the moment, both seem to be lacking.

Take relocation: the decision to relocate 120 000 refugees was approved with great speed and then what? According to the Commission, only 14 Member States have made available 3346 places, and less than 200 persons have actually been relocated. This figure is shameful and I call on all member states to shoulder their responsibility. The Parliament is pursuing its work on the permanent relocation mechanism and the EU list of safe countries of origin, both rightly proposed by the Commission.

Take the so-called "hotspots": in October, Frontex and the European Asylum Support office called for national experts but we have only reached about half the number requested. Hotspots will only be considered a functional concept by the European Parliament when they are able to deliver a full service, from first entry to final decision, backed up by EU agencies and in conformity with common rules. Anything else can at best be described as "work in progress" which needs urgent completion. The lack of progress on the ground is very frustrating and it's unacceptable that we are having the same discussion today as we were having in October. I expect the Commission to be frank in informing us about where the bottlenecks are and we need above all to find pragmatic solutions where help is needed.

It is therefore a welcome first step that Greece on 3 December activated the EU civil protection mechanism, agreed to a Frontex operation at the border with FYROM where the situation is particularly severe, and triggered the Rapid Border Intervention Team mechanism. The European Parliament also welcomes the launch last Monday by the Commission and UNHCR of a scheme to provide 20.000 additional reception places for asylum seekers and relocation candidates in Greece through subsidies for housing in the private sector.

On several occasions I have in the name of the European Parliament pleaded with you to fulfil your funding pledges to funds set up to help refugees. At the EU Turkey Summit you decided to set up a three billion Euro Refugee Facility for Turkey to improve the living conditions of more than two million Syrian refugees in Turkey. The European Parliament has stepped up to the plate and thanks to the outcome of the 2016 budget conciliation 500 million Euros can be made available from the EU budget. And now we hear that at the request of the Member States it may be even 1 billion for EU budget. I call on member states to provide all necessary information requested by the Commission in the next four days and fully involve the European Parliament in this budgetary procedure to assure proper democratic accountability and control. With GNI key contributions it would be actually the revision of the Multiannual Financial Framework that would be the most appropriate solution to be used, ensuring that all prerogatives of both arms of budgetary authority are respected and unity of the budget is safeguarded. But most importantly: make the needed funds available. This step will save lives.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The refugee and migration crisis risks putting into question the integrity of the Schengen Area. Therefore, the European Parliament will examine carefully every temporary closure of internal borders notified by Member States. As you know the EU has set itself strict rules for when this is possible and necessary, and I urge the Commission to be particularly vigilant that the requests are properly consulted in advance and well-justified.

We welcome the Commission's proposal last Tuesday on a European border and coastguard. In times of great pressure at the external borders, time is precious, and we are reminded daily how burdensome, uncertain and time-consuming the current procedures are. Frontex, together with corresponding national authorities, is to become a genuine European Border and Coast Guard with a broad mandate, with its own human resources and equipment pool, ensuring that rules, including safeguards concerning fundamental rights, but also rules on returns, are applied uniformly along our 44000 km of external sea and 9000 km of external land borders.

The Parliament will give its full attention to this necessary and major upgrade. Enjoying a Europe free of internal borders and sharing the responsibility for the management of our external borders are two sides of the same coin.

Finally I should add that Parliament is working on its own comprehensive, long-term, approach to migration policy and our co-rapporteurs Kyenge and Metsola will present their first proposals on 18 January.

Counter-terrorism

Ladies and gentlemen, I would like to strongly welcome the political agreement between Parliament and Council this week on the Data Protection Package. As you know, this represents years of painstaking work by the co-legislators to upgrade our framework which predates the Internet age. Our legislation should reflect our values, our vision for society, and I'm glad to say that this week's agreement, despite the concessions made by Parliament, puts the EU on track to become the gold standard for data privacy and security. May I strongly insist that you exercise all possible influence so that the Council now provides the Parliament with its first reading position on the Data Protection Package in January as a matter of absolute priority. Any delay would not be acceptable.

Organised crime and terrorists are adept at exploiting our area without internal border controls. And therefore law enforcement and intelligence cannot afford to have any blindspots. That is why the political agreement to upgrade Europol is particularly timely. And I would like to highlight just two important developments: first, the creation of an Internet Referral Unit to better address cyber crime and the activities and propaganda of violent extremists on the Internet; second, the creation of the Joint Parliamentary Control Group, consisting of the European Parliament and all the national parliaments, to oversee Europol's activities.

With the political agreement of the 2nd December on an EU-Passenger Name Records system, approved in the EP at committee level on 10th December by a large majority, the Parliament and Council have ensured that a single set of EU standards and strong safeguards will apply to the processing and storage of PNR data. The Parliament committed last February to finalising this file by the end of year, and I'm glad to report that this has been achieved and that Parliament has delivered.

Of course, we await the final validation of these four key political agreements, but I would already like to pay tribute to the tenacity of the Luxembourg Presidency and the Commission, and the unfailing commitment of our rapporteurs Albrecht, Lauristin, Diaz de Mera and Kirkhope.

And on the key issue of preventing radicalisation and recruitment to terrorist organisations, Parliament adopted its position on 25th November by a large majority with many concrete policy proposals which we expect to see put into action – from tackling radicalisation online and in prisons, to promoting education and social inclusion, preventing departure and return, and stepping up exchange of information.

But I think we all realise that Europe still has a very long way to go yet in fighting against serious and organised crime and terrorism.

It is easy to blame Europe or Schengen for failures in security in our Member States, and wave the illusion that retreating behind national borders somehow immunises against – often home-grown - terrorists.

Directie Integratie Europa

Onze Referentie
MinBuZa-2015.

If we retreat behind recriminations and divisions,
If we curtail our own freedoms in a disproportionate way,
If we fail to stand by our common values and rights,
If we let ourselves be sucked into the spiral of violence and stigmatisation, then the terrorists win.

The European Parliament is committed to enhancing Europe's security whilst respecting fundamental rights and it is with this resolve that we welcome the accelerated delivery by the Commission of its Agenda on Security, with proposals to review firearms legislation and to ensure terrorism-related acts, including all possible elements are commonly defined and criminalised, be it funding, travelling, training or facilitation.

We will also shortly examine the Commission's proposal on controls at the external borders.

And we need to look at every possibility to fight against the financing of terrorism: tracing financial operations, freezing assets and fighting against trafficking in cultural goods.

But let's be clear, my colleagues and I – right across the political spectrum - are very concerned that existing tools at EU level, both in the areas of migration management and security policy, are not being properly used and information is not being properly exchanged between all players. Take the Schengen Information System II, Europol's focal point "Travellers", EURODAC, ECRIS – in all these cases we have diagnosed a lack of interoperability or exchange between Member States and EU agencies. I urge you: provide the political impetus to make this happen.

One thing is clear: if we want to preserve our freedom of movement, then we must act fast and we must act decisively.

Economic and Monetary Union

Ladies and gentlemen,

Three years ago, the European Council endorsed a roadmap towards a Genuine Economic and Monetary Union. The completion of the Banking Union was set as a priority. The aim was to guarantee a way out of the vicious circle between banks' debts and sovereign debt while at the same time ensuring financial stability in the participating Member States. Ailing banks should no longer be able to drag down other banks, enmesh countries in economic difficulties and leave the taxpayers to face the consequences.

The Five Presidents' Report also sets the completion of the Banking Union as a priority, to be achieved during Stage 1.

Today, the first pillar of the Banking Union, namely the Single Supervisory Mechanism is up and running and the second pillar, the Single Resolution Mechanism, will be operational as of 1st January 2016. We should all welcome this great achievement. Still, the process is not over: we need to work on setting up the third pillar, the European Deposit Insurance Scheme.

As long as the third and last pillar is not in place we are in danger of having a bank go through a resolution procedure where the costs linked to the resolution will be borne by the Single European Resolution Fund while the protection of private deposits will be financed by individual national deposit guarantee schemes. This becomes very complicated!

Apart from that, this means that there is a possibility that depositors from different Member States may not benefit from the same level of protection, when they are all equally non-responsible of the trouble the bank gets into. This, from an ethical point of view, is very difficult to explain.

I am well aware that the issue is controversial in some Member States. As I am aware that an important number of Member States still need to do their homework and transpose the Bank Recovery and Resolution and the Deposit Guarantee Scheme Directives. However, this should not stop us from working on finding compromises and solutions. Actually it should be the opposite: because the issue is sensitive, we should properly discuss it.

I therefore call on heads of government to abide by their own decisions. We cannot afford to stop halfway. A Banking Union must either be created properly or not created at all. An incomplete Banking Union, lacking the third pillar, would be highly dysfunctional and would leave taxpayers vulnerable. We have already achieved considerable progress, achieving necessary goals which seemed unthinkable just a short while ago. Let's take the extra steps to get us to a real banking union. Let's complete what we set out to do.

Besides the completion of the Banking Union, the Five Presidents' Report foresees a series of steps that can be taken in the short term within the existing legal framework. The Commission's package on Completing Europe's Economic and Monetary Union adopted on the 21st October is meant to launch the implementation of some of these measures. The European Parliament welcomed the package as a step in the right direction. However, we noted with regret that although strengthening democratic accountability is one of the key objectives of the 5 Presidents' Report, the package does not leave enough room for true parliamentary oversight. The timing of the revamped European Semester, in particular, is a matter of concern.

Further efforts will be necessary to address the current shortcomings of the institutional framework of the euro area. I trust the Commission to do the necessary reflections on the further follow-up to the Five Presidents' Report. Finally I call on the Commission to consult in due time the European Parliament in the preparation of the White Paper on the transition between Stage 1 and Stage 2 of the reforms of the EMU.

The European Parliament stands ready to play its part in the process in order to enhance democratic accountability and greater ownership over economic governance issues. In this respect, we welcomed President Dijsselbloem's presence in plenary last Tuesday to discuss the euro area recommendations. This provided an opportunity for a debate at EU level on issues that are too often seen as complex and technocratic but that will actually in the end affect the citizens. And this increased accountability of the President of the Eurogroup was all the more welcome at a moment when the Commission proposes that he or she becomes the representative of the euro area in the IMF.

On the scrutiny of macro-economic adjustment programmes too, the European Parliament wants to play its role. The matter was discussed at the Conference of Presidents on the 2nd December, where political groups unanimously tasked the committee on economic and monetary affairs to reflect on the appropriate modalities for ensuring democratic control over the implementation of the programmes. The aim of the European Parliament is not to take part in the institutions' decision making process but to strengthen the various actors' accountability at EU level and provide for the possibility of holding public debates.

Be it on the European Semester, or on the scrutiny of macro-economic adjustment programmes, it is now clear that the European Parliament is the place where the debate on decisions taken at EU level is taking place.

Energy Union with a forward-looking climate change policy

This weekend something happened, which many people thought was impossible: an ambitious climate agreement was reached in Paris, a truly global agreement, to which all countries will participate. Now, it is universally recognized that we must stay well below the 2 °C temperature increase, and that we should pursue efforts to limit the increase to 1.5 °C. We have set ourselves the goal to be an emissions neutral planet in the second half of this century. To not emit more greenhouse gas than the world can absorb. I would like to thank in particular our negotiators, Commissioner Cañete, Luxembourg's Minister for the Environment Ms Dieschbourg and the European Union negotiating team. And also your government, President Hollande, for hosting and chairing the conference, and always acting as an honest broker, thereby creating the trust that was needed to get the whole world behind this agreement.

In Paris, we were united as the European Union. We need to stay united when discussing the implementation of the Paris agreement and it is important that the European Council gives a strong and positive signal to the rest of the world. When doing so, the Parliament will certainly be at your side.

To reach the goals laid down in the Paris agreement we will have to change the ways we use and produce energy. The Energy Union will be key in delivering the EU's long term commitments to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Crucial will be the reform of the European Emissions Trading System and the proposal for the Effort-Sharing Decision.

Boosting energy efficiency and renewable energy will be the two major means of achieving greenhouse gas emission reductions while at the same time ensuring energy security and independence. The potential for improving energy efficiency is significant - particularly in buildings - and the benefits are tremendous: Not only does it cut emissions and reduce imports but also help lowering energy bills for households and thus combat energy poverty. At the same time 2 million jobs could be created as a result of energy efficiency measures by 2020.

We will need an ambitious energy efficiency target of 40 % by 2030 and a clear and stable regulatory framework that creates the right incentives for the necessary investments in energy efficiency. Parliament looks forward to working with the Commission and Council on the revisions of both the Energy Efficiency Directive and the Energy Performance of Buildings Directive foreseen to start during the second half of 2016.

Furthermore, renewables play an important role in pursuing Europe's leadership in a green economy and in developing new future-oriented industries and technologies. EU companies, many of them SMEs, employ 1.2 million people and have a share of 40% of world patents for renewable technologies. For the transition to renewable energy to happen, we need a clear target of at least 30% by 2030 and a stable regulatory framework. Today I have focused on the climate dimension of the Energy Union, while fully recognising the importance of the other dimensions, such as energy security, the need to have a fully interconnected market, the need to ensure that European industries that produce turbines, solar panels, high-quality steel and construction materials in particular, can take full advantage of the energy transition, and the need to have an integrated approach regarding research and innovation challenges. Now, practical steps have to follow in the wake of this historic agreement, which will make safer the future of our planet, for the current and next generations

United Kingdom

Directie Integratie Europa

Ladies and gentlemen,

Allow me to share the views of the European Parliament with you on the settlement Prime Minister Cameron is seeking for the UK within the EU. First of all, I sincerely believe that together we can all come to a suitable agreement which takes into account the sensitivities of all sides and also the legal constraints.

Onze Referentie
MinBuZa-2015.

To achieve a good deal it is crucial to understand that all of the requests present some form of difficulty. Some are very difficult, others more workable, but all need to be addressed with care. Take the request for cutting red tape. This seems completely harmless. Of course we are all in favour! But if we are in favour of helping businesses then often less red tape actually comes through unifying our rules rather than 28 different laws. We must also ensure that the end product is better laws not deregulation. The devil often therefore lies in the detail.

The process must also avoid unduly advantaging those who move more slowly along the road of EU integration, especially regarding the areas that are the building blocks of the EU such as the single market. We all want to maintain the integrity of the single market and to avoid any discrimination. It is therefore difficult for me to understand how one can call for the protection of the single market while at the same time asking for special treatment. Sharing a true single market necessarily means sharing common rules and objectives.

We must altogether also avoid chasing badly designed solutions to a correctly diagnosed problem. National parliaments do indeed need to be more involved and aware of EU decision making but there are other more pertinent ways for achieving this than what is currently being proposed.

Finally, of course, we cannot bring in discrimination based on nationality. It goes without saying that the limitations to in-work benefits being requested will lead to outright discrimination. Abuse, where it exists, should indeed be tackled forcefully. Likewise, any ambiguities or uncertainties in our rules need to be addressed. But introducing discrimination against EU workers does not seem to be the way to achieve this. EU governments have raised their concerns on political and legal grounds.

Throughout the process the European Parliament, through myself among others, will be closely monitoring developments and flagging up concerns which may arise from glossing over certain requests. Obviously, the European Parliament will also be involved if legal modifications may become necessary.

Before I close let me make you all aware of a letter I addressed to the Presidency concerning a proposal the European Parliament adopted on its electoral procedure. A reform of this procedure is urgently needed, also in the light of the steadily decreasing turnouts. Parliament has done its part and now call on the Council to endorse the proposal or to open negotiations with the Parliament in view of a swift agreement.

Thank you for your attention.
